For Year-Around Gardeners

This easy-to-build backyard hothouse will give countless hours of year-around pleasure to amateur horticulturists.

Equipped with a high-temperature liquefied petroleum gas space heater, it is capable of growing hardy plants as well as delicate tropical varieties even during the worst winter weather.

The simple frame is built with two-by-four studs and joists on 16-inch centers, and the door is constructed of 3-by-3/4-inch pine. The pivoting ventilator above the door helps control humidity.

Covering the sturdy frames is heavy-gauge clear plastic nailed under lathing. The waterproof plastic permits the sunlight to enter without allowing moisture to escape.

Several models of automatic LP-Gas space heaters equipped with thermostats are available to keep the interior at high, even temperatures.

Consult your neighborhood LP-Gas dealer about the proper heater size, which depends upon the dimensions of your hothouse, the severity of the winter climate, and the temperature necessary for your plants.

LP-Gas, delivered in portable cylinders (above) as well as in bulk quantities, eliminates the need of costly installations necessary for other heating fuels. It also assures uninterrupted heat throughout the year, protecting your plants even when other power systems fail during winter storms.

Holiday at Home

A tropical holiday during winter's freezing cold or an invigorating seashore excursion to escape summer's sizzling heat are among the surest ways to safeguard good health and cheery disposition for busy adults and frisky youngsters.

But families too busy to get away—or who want resort comfort throughout the year—may select a holiday climate at home with the flick of a thermostat.

Automatic liquefied petroleum gas year-around air conditioners instantly provide the refreshing coolness of the northern lakes or the cozy warmth of Acapulco—despite the weather outside. With LP-Gas, even homes beyond the mains can have automatic gas service.

In addition to cooling in the summer and heating in the winter LP-Gas air conditioners dehumidify the air for sinus sufferers filter the air for hay fever victims, and expel stale odors.

Compact models for both new and remodeled homes can be installed in closets (above), under stairways, and in kitchens, laundry and rumpus rooms, basements, and even the attic.

Because LP-Gas air conditioners have no moving parts in the cooling and heating cycles, homeowners may expect exceptionally long service. This also cuts maintenance and repair costs and does away with friction heat, which reduces efficiency in other types.

Space Is an Illusion

A comfortable illusion of spaciousness—not always measurable in inches and feet—can be created in small kitchens with a few simple decorating "tricks."

Color is a major factor. Rooms decorated in varying shades of the same basic color seem larger than they really are. And light color—especially white—make a small room appear higher, wider, and handsomer.

Large mirrors also turn the trick. They create the effect of double space.

Carefully-selected appliances make a big difference, too. They not only create the illusion of space—they actually save it. Liquefied petroleum gas appliances especially help homemakers solve kitchen decorating problems because their adaptability permits countless modern arrangements to take maximum advantage of existing space.

The LP-Gas appliances in this up-to-date kitchen "expand" the room by converting otherwise wasted space into practical working areas. LP-Gas, conveniently stored on the property, provides city comforts for families living beyond the natural gas mains.

The oven-broiler is installed into a previously-unused chimney wall, and the top-burners are built into the countertop to conserve the space which ordinarily would have been occupied by a free-standing range.

And the LP-Gas grill is installed into the niche between the chimney and the counter, saving additional space which otherwise would have been wasted.
